The weetest minstrel ever sent out of parapline cannot sing a newborn child to sleep on an empty stomach. We have known reckless nurses to give the little ones a dose of paregoric or scothing eyrup in place of its cup of milk, when but this is the one alternative. The little stomach of the sleeping child, as it becomes gradually empty, folds on itself in plaits; two of these make it restless; three will open itseyes, but by careful soothing these may be closed again; tour plaits and the charm is broken there is no more sleep in that household until that child has been fed.
